

Swarthmore College

Works

Art & Art History Faculty Works

Art & Art History

1998

Remembrances Of Jane Hayward

Michael Watt Cothren

Swarthmore College, mcothre1@swarthmore.edu

Follow this and additional works at: <https://works.swarthmore.edu/fac-art>

Part of the Ancient, Medieval, Renaissance and Baroque Art and Architecture Commons

Let us know how access to these works benefits you

Recommended Citation

Michael Watt Cothren. (1998). "Remembrances Of Jane Hayward". Gesta. Volume 37, Issue 2. 130-130.
<https://works.swarthmore.edu/fac-art/5>

This work is brought to you for free by Swarthmore College Libraries' Works. It has been accepted for inclusion in Art & Art History Faculty Works by an authorized administrator of Works. For more information, please contact myworks@swarthmore.edu.

Remembrances of Jane Hayward

Author(s): Shirley Prager Banner, Madeline Caviness, Jean Taralon, Marilyn Stokstad, Timothy B. Husband, William D. Wixom, Michael W. Cothren and Alice Cooney Frelinghuysen

Source: Gesta, Vol. 37, No. 2, Essays on Stained Glass in Memory of Jane Hayward (1918-1994) (1998), pp. 127-130

Published by: University of Chicago Press on behalf of the International Center of Medieval Art

Stable URL: <http://www.jstor.org/stable/767249>

Accessed: 08-02-2016 20:11 UTC

Your use of the JSTOR archive indicates your acceptance of the Terms & Conditions of Use, available at <http://www.jstor.org/page/info/about/policies/terms.jsp>

JSTOR is a not-for-profit service that helps scholars, researchers, and students discover, use, and build upon a wide range of content in a trusted digital archive. We use information technology and tools to increase productivity and facilitate new forms of scholarship. For more information about JSTOR, please contact support@jstor.org.

University of Chicago Press and International Center of Medieval Art are collaborating with JSTOR to digitize, preserve and extend access to Gesta.

<http://www.jstor.org>

glass she wanted to buy. She was constantly trying to tell me what to do where glass was concerned, and I was far more willing [to go along] than she ever admitted. It was this unequivocal devotion to the advancement of glass studies—through her research, writings, and lectures, as well as through the remarkable exhibitions and gallery installations outlined in the bibliography included in this volume—that made Jane Hayward such a pivotal figure in stained-glass studies in this country.

William D. Wixom
The Metropolitan Museum of Art

Being asked to catalogue the Raymond Pitcairn collection in 1977 was probably one of the great opportunities of Jane's scholarly career. Rather than keeping this work to herself, she turned it into a collaborative effort, and made it the great opportunity of my education. During weekly visits to the Pitcairn home, Glencairn, which were to extend over a two-year period, Jane befriended everyone, affirming the insights of all around us, always playing the role of honored guest, never the imperious intruder seeking art historical opportunity. During those long workdays in the basement at Glencairn, I learned to understand stained glass as medieval artifact largely because Jane trusted me to find my own way, sitting back and listening to me talk about what I saw, waiting for me to refine my own ideas rather than pointing out their initial inadequacy by imposing hers. We struggled together as equals even though we weren't. I can still hear her impatient voice coming down the hall to me between puffs of smoke: "Stop telling me what you see; touch the glass and tell me what you feel!" A lot of wonderful things came out of Jane's work at Glencairn: a spectacular exhibition and some important acquisitions for her beloved Cloisters Collection, the groundwork at Glencairn for transforming a well-guarded private collection into a community treasure and a working museum. But in the midst of setting up these large accomplishments, she also found time to turn me into a stained-glass specialist. Jane Hayward was a great teacher.

Michael W. Cothren
Swarthmore College

Perhaps because early on Jane trained as an Americanist, she had a sincere affinity for American stained glass and remained entirely committed to the subject throughout her career, in addition to her work in her own field. Jane was an important catalyst and mover in the founding and subsequent efforts of the Census of Stained Glass Windows in America, created in 1979 "to preserve a published record of this endangered portion of our national artistic heritage." Jane was a vocal and active participant at the Board level, rarely missing a meeting and always remaining deeply committed to the organization's original mission. She was also a worker bee at the field level. She trained numerous volunteers and was an important contributor to the organization's pilot project, the Rhode Island census. Her extensive work there covered six counties and over a thousand windows in southern Rhode Island. It will be difficult to enter a church in America today without remembering Jane Hayward, and the exacting standards she brought to her work and her unabashed zeal for the medium.

Alice Cooney Frelinghuysen
The Metropolitan Museum of Art

Planting the Jane Hayward daylily (Hemerocallis "Jane Hayward") at The Cloisters, July 1994 (photo: M. B. Shepard)