Rosalie's Song of the Kiss

an excerpt from The Black Swan

Cold stones, dead air, dark tower—
I lean into your body's warmth.
Black feathers, singing wings.

Cold stones, dead air, dark cloister—
No more renunciation, roses fading into dust.

Cold stones, dead air, dark portal—
I dreamt we kissed in a wheel of jasmine.
It was there I should have kissed you first,
not in this grave.
